Editorial Comment

A Test Of Fair Play

If President Eisenhower should decide that his newest illness does not alter his determination to run again, he himself is sure to suggest anew that his health is a legitimate issue in the 1956 campaign.

At all stages since his heart attack last year, he has presented the facts of his condition with complete candor. His able press secretary, James Hagerty. has been of tremendous assistance in telling the story.

One cannot conceive that the President would choose now to follow a less candid course.

Very likely, in the minds of some Americans, the question of his fitness for a second term will seem more critical in the light of his recent abdominal operation.

That alone probably would not have aroused too much concern. As has now been thoroughly emphasized, two Democratic presidential hopefuls. Adlai Stevenson and Gov. Averell Harriman of New York, both have had major operations within the past year

It is putting this illness back to back with the earlier heart ailment that provides the possible impact on voters' minds.

Some Republican leaders already unfriendly toward Vice President Nixon's bid for renomination may argue that the new situation demands reexamination of his claims. They would perhaps contend that some independent voters shaken by the President's two illnesses might be reassured if a 'less controversial" figure were chosen for his running mate.

At this moment, though, all indications are that Nixon still will be strongly favored for that spot if the President goes ahead and runs.

However that may be, a good many Democrats appear ready to make more of the health factor than they intended when only the heart attack was in-

But they should have heard enough from the voters by now to realize that injudicious use of the health issue could easily backfire on them.

The President's showing in the spring primaries, his current rating in the opinion polls and all general political soundings indicate he is as popular

Undue stress on his illnesses could easily stir further broad sympathies.

Nor are comments likely to be well received which declare that the President's doctors are "politically motivated" when they say he can run again. There is no evidence the 13 doctors who consulted on his recent operation were drawn from an approved Republican

Mr. Eisenhower's health is a campaign issue, yes. But it is an issue which his opponents must deal with as fairly and honestly as he does.
